Dear Secretary of State,

We write as charities, trade unions, lawyers and local authorities working with potential and confirmed victims of exploitation, including modern slavery and human trafficking, or who support people experiencing homelessness across the United Kingdom. We write to raise urgent concerns regarding changes to the Immigration Rules to enter into force on 1 December making rough sleeping grounds for removal of non-UK nationals which we believe will have severe consequences for confirmed and potential victims of modern slavery.

The proposed changes will have a significant impact on the Government’s Modern Slavery Strategy and undermine the United Kingdom’s position as a global leader in the fight against Modern Slavery.

Under the new rules, permission to stay can be refused or even cancelled if the Home Office is satisfied a person has been rough sleeping. By definition this means “sleeping” or “bedding down” for example in streets and doorways. These are situations of human deprivation and want, which victims often find themselves forced into beyond their control. The breadth of the rough sleeping rule undermines the Government’s claim that the provision will be used ‘sparingly’. The potential operation of the rules is also troubling particularly where a predecessor rough sleeping policy affecting EU victims was struck down as unlawful.2/3

The links between destitution and exploitation are well known.4 The new rules are likely to affect both victims before they have been identified and those facing homelessness or destitution after being confirmed as victims but not yet granted status and struggling to access support. The rules will increase the number of cases where victims of modern slavery are wrongly arrested, detained and removed from the UK without being identified – sometimes to be re-trafficked to the UK or elsewhere.\(^5\)

The rules risk facilitating abuse whereby exploitative employers will use the threat of destitution to coerce and exploit workers. In our experience, many migrant victims already face barriers coming forward because they fear that authorities will prioritise their immigration status over their experience of exploitation. Thus, the rules play into the hands of traffickers because the threat to victims that they will be detained and removed if they escape is a real one.

The rules will likely increase the risk of exploitation of the wider migrant homeless population including care leavers, who may feel they have no choice but to accept exploitative work and living conditions to avoid rough sleeping. The rules aggravate hostile environment policies including tying victims to exploitative employers under tied visa rules, and now by making a potential escape route to the street unlawful and risky.

The introduction of these rules in the midst of a global pandemic is extremely concerning, since many workers, including migrant workers, are being affected by large scale dismissals and unemployment linked to the economic downturn. Many migrants face restrictions accessing state support which puts them at great risk of destitution and homelessness since they have little to no safety net to assist them and their families during these difficult times.

In short, the rules punish rough sleeping, force people into riskier and exploitative situations to avoid it and are likely to put victims in a revolving door of abuse and revictimization and at increased risk of detention and removal.

As organisations and lawyers working with adults and young people vulnerable to exploitation and homelessness, we value the joint working between our sectors and the commitment from the UK Government to protect the most vulnerable in our society.

We strongly urge that you revoke the rough sleeping rules to avoid aggravating the already precarious situation that many victims find themselves in and the potential negative impact on the current Modern Slavery Strategy.

Yours Sincerely,
